

Photographer Unknown

I myself organised most of the trip. After extensive research in to barren and desolate areas surrounding Edinburgh (including, but not limited to: abandoned quarries, areas of the Pentlands and small islands in the Firth of the Forth), I eventually decided on the most easterly point of North Berwick beach. Not only is this location easily accessible by train, it is also relatively void of people (especially in March) and has the aura of a moonscape: Rocky and grey.

Photograph: Francis Davies